

Is Your Business Still Exposed?

We can form a new Corporation or LLC in as little as 24 hours

If you operate your business either as a sole-proprietorship or general partnership, your personal assets are fully exposed to all business liabilities.

A sole proprietorship is not a separate legal entity from the owner. Even if you file a fictitious business name with your county recorder's office, you personally are liable for all claims against your business...frivolous or not. Many claims against small businesses can exceed the limits of your CGL insurance, and many others are specifically excluded from coverage.

Worse, if two or more people (other than husband-wife) are in business together, they are considered by default to be in a general partnership. This means you have all the liability of a sole proprietorship, plus the liability for all actions of your partner(s).

OK, I need this, but which entity is best? "C" Corp? "S" Corp? LLC?

The answer to any legal question is: it depends. During a free consultation with our experienced small business attorneys, we will ask you the right questions about your business structure, tax situation, etc., and recommend the best entity for you. Online services just fill out and file forms...only an attorney is permitted to offer legal advice.
